1	What are two human values that you believe are essential for building meaningful relationships in life? Describe how these values influence the way you interact with others, using real-life examples from your personal or social experiences.	5	CO1, L2
You are a young adult who has recently started living away from home for your studies or a new job. While enjoying your independence, you begin to realize the value of the things your parents did for you—like managing household chores, handling finances, and offering emotional support. You also notice that staying connected with them has become more meaningful.
2	How has living independently changed your understanding of your parents' role in your life? Discuss how this experience has influenced your attitude toward family, responsibility, and daily living.	5	CO1, L2
You are a software engineering student working on your final year project. Most of your classmates are choosing common ideas like e-commerce websites, library systems, or attendance tracking apps. Your supervisor encourages you to choose a problem that shows creativity and addresses a real-world need in a new way.
3	How would you apply "out-of-the-box" thinking to select and develop a unique software engineering project? Explain the steps you would take to find an original idea and explain how your approach differs from traditional thinking.	4	CO2, L4
You have recently joined a Software company as a junior software engineer. During meetings, you notice that some colleagues speak over others, use informal language with senior staff, and check their phones frequently. As a new employee, you want to make a positive impression while maintaining professionalism and encouraging respectful behavior in the team.
4	How would you demonstrate proper etiquette, personal behavior, and professionalism in this environment? Illustrate the specific actions you would take and explain how your behavior could positively influence the team culture.	4	CO2, L4
You have recently joined a new job where you're expected to quickly learn a complex software tool that you've never used before. There is no formal training program, and your manager expects you to become productive within two weeks. Some of your colleagues are too busy to help, and the online documentation feels overwhelming.
5	How would you apply "learning to learn" skills to master the new software tool efficiently and independently? Explain the strategies you would use to manage your time, gathering resources, also adapt your approach if you face setbacks, and overcome challenges such as limited support, information overload and unfamiliar terminology.	7	CO3, L5
