| 1. | a) | Identify the misspelled words and Subject-Verb Agreement errors in the passage below and rewrite only the correct versions on your answer sheet.When engineers try to interprret complex systems, they often rely on graphs to show the flow of information. Each of the components have a specific role, but sometimes the misaligment between modules cause eficieny in the overall design. A diagram can help, but without proper clarirty, it becomes more confusing than helpful. In teams, neither the manager nor the designer understands the other's viewpoint completely, which slows down the decision-making process. The software tools, as well as the spreadsheets, provides a framework for understanding the intaractions, but the human factor often makes interpretation difficult.The committee of experts decides on the best strategies for improving workflow, yet the consensus among members are not always easy to achieve. Every one of the proposed changes require detailed testing before implementation. When designers and analysts collaborate, the combined feedback often improve the quality of the solution, but sometimes the lack of standardization in terminology reduce clarity. A diagram of the new system is distributed, yet some team members ignores the notes attached to it, leading to mistakes. | 5 | CO2 |
